TO THE RIX FAMILY:

This genealogy is offered to the family with the knowledge that it is far short of what a good and complete history of the family should be. Some of the statistical omissions are owing to a lack of ability on the part of the author to procure them from various sources, especially from people who have failed to make reply to first, second, and third letters of inquiry even to this day.

The scattering of our family into nearly every state of the Union, many moving and leaving little or no clue, has been another obstacle.

The work had its inception in data left the author by his father which contained no records further back than his grandfather, but from the death of his father in 1879, to 1894, not anything was done.

In 1894, the compiler commenced in earnest, and from the start search was made through various church and town records, especially of Salem, Mass., and Old Preston, Conn., where James, son of Thomas, settled in 1703.

Mistakes will undoubtedly be found in the work, but they exist, not from the want of painstaking efforts to avoid them, but generally from imperfect manuscripts and contrary statements made by members of the same family.

Many persons would be surprised to see the errors in their own letters, which are frequently the result, not of ignorance, but of carelessness. What is worth recording at all, is worth recording carefully and correctly. I would esteem it a favor, when mistakes are discovered, to have the corrections sent to me.

Thanking all who have helped in the matter, and asking the charitable consideration of all for errors or omissions,

I am very truly, your kinsman,
GUY SCOBY RIX.

HISTORY AND GENEALOGY OF THE RIX FAMILY.

This Genealogy treats of William and Thomas Rix, sons of Robert Rix, of Canninghall, England, the only ones coming to this country spelling their name "Rix."

The following letter from Mrs. H. L. M. Fry, of Washington, D. C., will explain itself.

It has been impossible to obtain, or even see the manuscript now in possession of Mrs. Fry, because, as she informs the writer, she intends to publish it in connection with other matter she has about Old Brancaster Castle.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 26, 1894.

Mr. Guy S. Rix,
Concord, N. H.

Dear Sir:

I cannot give you access to the old Brancaster papers, for various reasons, one is, I intend to publish a good deal of the old records, and for others to publish it, would spoil the sale of my book, but I will give you a little from the old records.

My father was born in England, came to Canada in 1836. Then, the people were dissatisfied, the provinces disturbed. Sir John Colburn was recalled and Sir Francis Head sent in his place, the rebellion broke out and British troops were sent to Toronto, Hamilton and London. We were young children, six of us. Father settled in the Upper Provinces, as they were then called, and so our younger days were all spent in Canada.

In 1859 we moved to Detroit, Michigan. My mother was the daughter of Sir John Rix, son of the Earl of Offord, an ancient family, a branch of the house of Norfolk.

We had heard our mother speak of Brancaster Castle, the ancestral home of the Rix family, of the noble old grandsires of past generations, who had been beheaded on Tower Hill for faith in Jesus Christ and the right, with many other stories of troublesome times, and of the old Castle and John Knox.

In 1868 I went to England and visited my birthplace, and arriving at the station, Thorp Burnum, the guard, pointed out to us the house where Admiral Lord Nelson was born.

Reaching the village of Brancaster we were met by my cousin, William Rix, whose house overlooks the German Ocean.

Brancaster Castle was once England's bulwarks. It is situated on a high cliff on the coast of Norfolk, battlemented and flanked by four high towers, east, north, west and south, the northern tower looking out on the German Ocean.

The walls of the castle are washed by the sea, and a deep moat is filled by water from the sea.

The fortifications extend along the road for a great distance. It has withstood the Norseman, the Danes and French invaders in its glory and power. The hundred dungeons were once filled with prisoners who listened to the notes of the Troubadour.

Of later times the castle has been a refuge for oppressed, wayfaring, persecuted believers of the faith of Christ of all lands. But like Dudley Castle, Wick Castle, Carew Castle, Doncaster Castle, Woodcraft Castle and others, the glory has departed.

The quaint church in the village of Brancaster has a beautifully carved altar, the work of one of our ancestors who was a prisoner in his own castle. It is a wonder that it escaped Cromwell's heavy hand. The church is within the walls of the Castle, and in a good state of preservation. The Castle was built by one of the early Dukes of Norfolk, and came into possession of the Earl of Offord and the Rix family.

The arms of the house of Norfolk are quartered with the arms of Offord, the Rix family, on one of the old tablets on the walls over the altar in the old Brancaster church, also on two or three of the slabs on the floor of the church over the vault.

In the church of the Castle, is an iron chest fastened into the walls, in fact it is a part of the church, and in which was kept the family records of births, marriages and deaths. It not only contained these records but often private papers.

Brancaster Castle has gone out of the Rix family, and as no one there now is interested in the family, I secured many valuable papers and family records, from which I have gleaned some items which may be of interest.

But little is known of the private life and actions of Henry VIII, but there is a written account of his visit to Brancaster Castle in its day of grandeur and magnificence, and the power of the Dukes of Offord.

At the time of the trial of the unfortunate Queen Anne Boleyn, Sir Thomas Rix, Earl of Offord, had defended the unhappy queen, because of his long friendship for her father. Sir Thomas Boleyn gave his support to the King against the Pope, and urged the breaking asunder the bond that bound England to Rome.

The bond was broken, and Henry constituted himself the head of the church, and England rejoiced and Protestantism was in a manner protected. But the good Earl of Offord had to pay the forfeit of his head for his firm friendship to Sir Thomas Boleyn.

They died together, Sir Thomas being the first victim.

As they walked out to the block, they stood and embraced each other. "Earl Offord" said Sir Thomas, "we have seen the fetters broken, the kingdom saved from popish power, the people may have to suffer, bleed and die for many years, but England will be the bulwark of Protestantism. Farewell my friend in the body, but our souls will be this night with our Redeemer and Lord."

When the present Duke, Sir John Thomas Rix, returned to the Castle with the headless body of his father, to be laid in the family vault, he went on to the ramparts of the Castle, taking with him the two oldest warders, his father's valet, the butler, the chaplain, his own servant, and his two brothers.

The Earl's vow.

Without his hat, with his arms outspread over the German Ocean, and in a voice that sent its echo around the turrets, he said slowly, "I, John Thomas Rix, Earl of Offord, by right commander of the Coast, Lord High Constable of the County of Norfolk, by the command of King Henry VIII, by the grace of God, I vow and declare, by the blood of our father whose headless body we laid away to await the general resurrection at the day of his appearing, I do solemnly state that this Castle shall be the home of the exile, the refuge of the persecuted, oppressed, downtrodden believers in Christ of all lands, for all preachers, a hiding place for the fugitive from popish power, for the wayfarer and for the Lords of the Covenant.

"None but Protestants shall serve me in any capacity, and if one in the village believes in the popish faith, he goes forth-with. Also I will keep in readiness one thousand horse to move at any moment in behalf of the Lord's cause on land or sea, so help me God, Amen."

A few years later we find this same King Henry VIII, signifying his royal will and pleasure to visit Brancaster at such a date. The present Countess of Offord was a Scotch woman. She was Lady Margaret Bruce, a descendant of Robert Bruce, King of Scotland. Very handsome, with beautiful eyes, she had that dark, clean, Scotch beauty, full of character and energy, and beloved by all the people on the estate. Strictly religious, already the Covenanters had found a refuge and the Lords of the Covenant a place of safety there.

The housekeeper was Scotch, and my lady's maid was faithful Highland Janett. When the King's messenger arrived with the announcement that he was coming, preparations were hastily made, but it did not fluster this practical woman, and orders were given and executed speedily. There was some excitement in the servants' hall, also in the stables and coach-houses.

The coaches of the royal party were ponderous affairs, drawn by four horses. The Guards always accompanied the King, five hundred strong, also his Majesty's Royal Dragoons.

The housekeeper wore a black silk dress with open Cabameo petticoat and a white Indian muslin apron, with large quilted silk pockets on the outside, like panniers on a donkey, to hold things. An immense bunch of keys attached to a chain hung at her side. She had three assistants and twenty maids and every one in their place.

The arrival of the King.

At the appointed time came the herald. The warder on the battlements observed his approach by the sound of his trumpet, arousing all within the Castle. This was then answered by the herald, who blew a royal blast. The great gates of oak, one foot thick, were lined with iron, and banded with ponderous iron bars. The arch was twelve feet thick with a row of Knights Templars on either side, like the twelve apostles, and each bearing a lump. Many a foe's battering ram had been used on those gates.

When the King drew near, the drawbridge was lowered, ready for the King's coaches to pass over. It was a royal pageant, gorgeous to behold. The Earl had gone to meet the royal party at Thorp Burnum with five hundred horse. His brother, Lord Thomas Rix, was to open the Castle gates with one hundred gentlemen attending him.

Sir Robert Rix was to stand at the entrance with one hundred powdered lackeys in crimson velvet with silver lace, the castle livery. Inside the grand hall stood the chief with fifty powdered footmen in crimson and silver. Four noble lords were appointed to conduct his majesty to the rooms prepared for the royal presence.

The Earl had met and conducted the pageant to the gates, then, coming into the castle, stood with the countess to receive the King. At the end of the hall, at the foot of the grand staircase, ready to conduct the King to the rooms prepared for him, were four noble lords of the county of Norfolk, Lord Weyburn, Lord Awafham, Lord Trevanyon and Lord De Ossay.

The King's rooms were six in number: the bedroom was hung with claret velvet, fastened with gold clasps. The furniture was of rosewood, richly carved, velvet seats, and an Indian cabinet. The room adjoining was furnished the same, except that the fastenings were of Scotch pebbles, and a cabinet of rare curiosities. In the dressing room the walls were hung with grass cloth to keep out the damp sea air. The floors were polished and covered with rugs from over the sea. The rooms for the gentlemen in waiting were equally rich, but the curtains of the bed and windows were lined with blue satin.

The Earl and Countess had received all the company. Very grand were they, the gentlemen in rich velvet doublets and knee breeches, silk stockings, garters of ribbon with rosettes and buckles, lace collars, and laces at the hand and wrists, and shirt fronts with deep lace and jewels, and gold and silver buckles. The officers were in gold lace and wore flowing curls.

Supper, served usually at seven o'clock, was served that night at eight o'clock, and was spread in the great banquet hall. The highly polished tables were covered with silver plates and dishes, and the drinking cups and tankards were of silver and lined with gold. As fingers were used freely, fingers bowls were used, and Damascus linen was used for hand clothes. The silver meat dishes often required two servants to carry them to the table. The chaplain asked the blessing. His Majesty's will was to sit as a gentleman at the table, not with stately ceremonies. There had been invited by the King these ladies and gentlemen to meet His Majesty according to his royal pleasure. In this he exercised his prerogative. The wives of the four lords were richly dressed.

The abundance and variety of the meats, fish, poultry and game astonished Henry Tudor, and he ate and drank well.

When supper was over, His Majesty, after complimenting his host on the fine flavor of the fish and the Norfolk beef, expressed his royal wish to retire for the night, and that he would, as it was his intention to be a country gentleman for a few days or weeks, meet the noble company at six o'clock breakfast on the morrow morning.

Attended by his lords in waiting, he gave one of his bows and kissed the hand of Lady Margaret and then retired.

His bodyguard of seven of the celebrated "Beefeaters" were on guard outside of his room.

The next day was the Sabbath, and after the morning meal was finished the chaplain read a chapter from the Bible and said prayers. Lady Margaret had informed the company that they strictly observed the Sabbath, so they proceeded to set out at nine o'clock, as that was the hour. It was such a fine morning the King proposed to walk with the Lady of the Castle, she taking the arm of the royal guest, they heading the procession, only preceded by the royal guards. Next came the clergy. The Bishop of Ely had arrived and was to preach that day. The Bishop of Norwich had also come, whom the King intended to unfrock. At the castle gate were assembled all the fishermen of the village and marines to escort the King, and all the children in linsey woolsey frocks, with tippets and little white caps. They all sang a psalm, led by the clerk of the village, the village schoolmaster. At the church porch they fell back into the churchyard to let the royal party enter.

The company being seated the services began. The dean and bishop had gone through the preliminary services, and the singing charmed the royal ear. Lady Margaret's rich and clear voice and the sweet voices of the other dames, and the gentlemen's cultivated voices mingled with the children's, and the hearty, earnest tones of the British sailors and fishermen had a peculiar effect.

It seems that John Knox, the great reformer, had arrived at the castle, but Lady Margaret had not spoken to the guests of his arrival except to the Bishop of Ely.

They had never met, but the bishop had heard of his eloquence and therefore begged him to preach.

The pulpit was high, and Knox had been all the time seated so the King could not see him, so the surprise was great when, instead of the Lord Bishop of Ely ascending the pupilt, up popped John Knox, the great Scotch reformer.

His text was, "The Lord is in His holy temple, let all the earth keep silent before Him." Up sprang the King, and going to the pew door, he threw it open, saying in a loud voice: "We cannot keep silent until we learn who is here, who art thou? come down." Master Knox came down, saying: "I am John Knox, by the power of God sent to preach the gospel." "Well, man, come and take our royal hand. I have been like Herod, desiring to see thee, see to it, man, that Cardinal Beaton's flames are put out by water from the river of God. Go up now, hold forth man, we would hear what thou hast to say. My Lord of Ely, we would that thou listen to this second Joshua." The King then took his seat and the service went on, and after the sermon, the thirty-ninth psalm having been sung, the Bishop pronounced the benediction, and the congregation dispersed.

Arriving at the castle, dinner being ready, all sat down, the King said grace in these words, "Thank God for what we are going to receive. Now Lord Weyburn help us to some beef." This short grace is used in the county of Norfolk to this day, and is called Henry VIII's blessing.

The story of Flodden Field.

From the roll of history in the old iron chest.

After the ascension of Henry VIII as the boy King, he was advised by his ministers that the English borderers had begun to make incursions into Scotland, and had slain Robert Kerr, a gentleman of high character. To punish these aggressions, Alexander Home, who was commander of the border, at once raised an army of 5,000 men, and entered England and ravaged the country, but on his return, secure with his spoils, he was attacked by some English horse who killed many of his men, and also took 200 prisoners, twenty-five of them being sent to Brancaster Castle. James of Scotland, hearing of this defeat, immediately declared war with Henry VIII of England. When James was at vespers in the church at Linlithgow, a venerable man, bareheaded and barefoot, with an old russet coat and linen girdle, approached James and addressed him in these prophetic words: "O King, I am sent to warn thee not to proceed in thy intended design, and if thou neglect to heed this admonition, neither thou nor thy followers will prosper." Having thus spoken he withdrew. It has been said that the old man was that Earl of Buchan who was blessed with second sight, a modern Elisha who had become one of the lords of the covenant. However, James paid no attention to this admonition, but immediately marched his brave but undisciplined army of 50,000 men into England. In the meantime the Earl of Surrey marched with his army to meet him. The contending armies met on Flodden Field, September 9, 1513.

Flodden Field.

An account of the battle in manuscript, written by Robert Rix, Earl of Offord, who commanded a body of reserves in the battle:

"The army consisted of 46,000 men, which were divided into two lines. Lord Howard led the main body of the first line, and Sir Edward Howard led the right wing and Sir Marmaduke led the left wing. The Earl of Surrey commanded the main body of the second line, Lord Dacre the right wing, Sir Edwin Stanley the left wing, and the young Earl of Offord (Robert Rix) was with the reserves. The Scottish army was formed into three divisions. The middle division was led by the King, the right by the Earl of Huntley, the Earl of Lenox and Earl of Argyle led the left. Besides these a large body of reserves was led by the Earl of Bothwell, arranging themselves in proper order.

"The Earl of Huntley began the battle, and after a sharp conflict put to flight the left wing of the English led by Sir Marmaduke Constable. The Scots drove them off the field, but in returning from the pursuit, Huntley found the whole Scottish army in great disorder from the fact that the divisions under Lenox and Argyle, elated with Huntley's success, had broken their ranks and all rushed headlong after the enemy. But they were surrounded by the English and were cut to pieces.

"At this critical juncture, the division under the King and Bothwell animated by the valor of Lord Huntley, still made headway against the English, and forming themselves into a circular body around the English, protracted the action till night separated these earnest, brave combatants. The number killed on each side was nearly equal, amounting to 5,550 men each. But the advantage was with the English, who lost persons of inferior rank and consequence, whereas the Scots lost their King, a just and moderate prince, together with the flower of their nobility. It is deeply deplored when brave and learned noblemen such as those who fell at Flodden, should be cut off in their prime. Such men as Scotland will never see again. Many of them were great scholars and very eminent men. I deeply regret that England's victory should be obtained at such a sacrifice of genius and accomplishments."

This Work Treats of William and Thomas Rix of Canninghall, England.

It is a curious fact, that in all the researches made by the compiler, not one male or female descendant of William has been found other than those contained herein. The compiler has found three families of the name, one in Duluth, Minn., and two in Buffalo, N. Y., but they came direct from England. Nine-tenths of families say "three brothers" came over, and we have the same tradition, but so far we have found but two, and as there was a Richard Rix in Salem in 1676, perhaps he was the third brother.

In the Salem and Boston records the name is spelled Rix, Ricks and Rixe.

GENEALOGY OF THE RIX FAMILY.

WILLIAM RIX<sup>1</sup>, son of Robert Rix of Canninghall, England, was in Boston, Mass., before 1645. He was probably in Ispwich in 1640, for in Thomas Letchford's notebook, he gives an account of a contract to build a house for William Rix, in Ispwich, in that year. It was to be 16 feet long and 14 feet wide, and to cost £21. He married Grace —, and died in Boston, Nov. 13, 1657. His widow married, second, in 1663, Andrew Newcome.

THOMAS RIX<sup>1</sup>, brother of William, was probably born in Canninghall, England. He was in Salem before 1649. The date of his coming here is unknown. His brother, William, speaks of Theophilus, son of my brother William. He married, first, Margaret, widow of Miles Ward. She died May 24, 1660, and he married, second, Sept. 3, 1661, Bridget Musket, born in Pelham, England. She was the widow of Hon. William Fisk, born in England about 1613. She had by him five children, and Sarah Rix of Salem was called mother to them. Mr. Rix was a barber surgeon, and lived in Salem, Mass. "Thomas Rix being indebted to the town, sold his house and shop to meet the debt." He afterwards lived near the lower end of Elm St. He bought lands in Rockingham County, N. H., in 1670, but sold them the next year. He probably went to Old Preston, Conn., where his son James went in 1703. In the New London County (Conn.), Historical Society's publication, Vol. I, can be found the most remarkable diary extant by Joshua Hempstead, of New London, Conn. For forty-seven years nothing hardly escaped this man's observation, and which he recorded. This remarkable man was at once a farmer, surveyor, house and ship carpenter, attorney, stone cutter, sailor and trader. Being in want of a shipwright, he goes to Preston and engages Goodman Rix. In his diary he says: "Nov. 1st, 1718, I went to the funeral of Old Ricks who died last night." This must have been Thomas, the emigrant, and being called "Old Ricks" indicates he was the oldest Rix in Preston. In a deposition he says he was born in 1622.

It is not known where he lived or died.

11. JAMES RIX<sup>2</sup> (Thomas<sup>1</sup>), born in Salem, Mass., baptized in First Church, Salem, Oct. 18, 1657; married Margaret ——. He lived and was taxed in Salem, removed to Wenham, Mass., but returned to Salem, and had been taxed during his absence, but, learning the circumstances of his absence, his taxes were remitted. Mr. Rix and his wife were members of the First Church, Salem, from which they both withdrew, June 6, 1703, the year he went to Preston, Conn. He went to Stonington, Conn., in the summer of 1703, but bought the same year a large tract of land in Preston of Joseph and Ephraim Minor.

In Preston, and near his farm, is an old burying ground known as the "Rixtown burying grounds," where many of the family are buried. The old homestead had remained in the family until about 1880, when it passed to others, but, as a correspondent wrote, "The farm is there still." November 22, 1727, James deeded to his son, Thomas Rix, "for in ye consideration of ye natural love, good will and fatherly affection that I bear to my loving and dutiful son Thomas Rix of Preston, a certain teneement and housing and lands, being two-thirds of ye farm that I now live upon, reserving to myself and my wife Margaret part of ye house." Ref., Book of Deeds, 4, page 400, Preston Books.

A deed from James Rix to Ebenezer Lambert, of date Nov. 3, 1703, and recorded in Salem, shows him to have been a shipwright, and shows also Margaret, wife of James Rix, was of Preston.

In the diary of Joshua Hempstead, before referred to, can be found the following about James.

Mr. Hempstead, being in want of a shipwright, goes to Preston and engages James Rix, and in his diary of date, Monday, June 18, 1716, says: "Goodman Ricks come to work for four pounds fifteen shill. pr. month, half goods (viz.) salt and rum." Tuesday, July 10, 1716, Mr. Hempstead enters in his diary, "Ricks has gone to caulk Pelton's sloop." Friday, Oct 5, 1716, he says: "Nathl. & Robert is gone to carry 8 bushels of salt to Robt. Stoddard for Mr. Ricks." Jan. 9, 1717, he settled with Mr. Ricks. Mr. Hempstead records in his diary, Sept. 29, 1729, "Old Goodee Ricks was buried, aged about 76."

James and wife were buried in the "Rixtown burying grounds," and both have gravestones, but the only letters legible is on one of them, M. R. 1711. It is very evident he married, second, Margaret, as she was named in the deed to his son Thomas in 1727.

When James settled in Preston, there were no buildings on the place, and the only way to reach the land was a rough bridle path from Norwich, ten miles away. James probably came from Salem to New London by boat, for he came up from that place to Preston.

The farm at this date (1905) is in the town of Griswold, which part was taken off from Preston in 1815.

Within a few years after the settlement of the neighborhood, a cemetery was established, and bodies buried there probably by permission, but in 1737 the land was deeded to twenty-two residents, and among them was Thomas Rix. From time to time several additions were made to the grounds and at this date (1905) thirty-seven Rix's are buried there. The compiler paid a visit to these grounds in September, 1905, and located without any doubt the graves of Thomas Rix the emigrant, his son James and wife Margaret, his first wife, where all three lie side by side. James may have lived in Ipswich, where his first child may have been born.

A copy of the deed of the land bought by James Rix situated in the town of Preston, Conn.:

"To all Christian people whom this present shall come know ye. Ephriam and Joseph Minor of Stonington in the County of New London, of Connecticut Colony in New England send greeting.

"Know ye that we Ephraiam and Joseph Minor upon good & just consideration and money more especially for in consideration of 20 Pounds of current Money of New England in hand accurate & well & trult payed to us by James Rix of Preston, Conn., New London Coliny and County, to record of which we do so jointly and severally. † See note 3.

‡ See note 4.

Mr. Rix joined a party of thirty-three men in Salem, Mass., to settle in the wilderness, and chose the town of Boscawen, N. H., and were the first settlers. This was in 1733, but it seems Mr. Rix did not remain there long, for he came to Concord, married and lived there at least till he had two children born. At it was customary to elect a young married man to the office of hogreeve, he was elected to that office, the year of his marriage. During the Indian raids, in 1746, the inhabitants were told to repair to the garrisons whenever the Indians showed themselves, and among those to repair to the garrison of Timothy Walker, Jr., was Nathaniel Rix and family, which garrison stood where the Franklin Pierce house now stands in Concord.

Nathaniel Rix enlisted in Concord, Jan. 21, 1745, in Capt. John Clough's company of scouts; dismissed Mar. 18, 1745. He also enlisted Apr. 24, 1755, in Capt. Joseph Eastman's company, Col. Joseph Blanchard's regiment in the expedition against Crown Point; discharged Oct. 21, 1755.

His first two children were born in Concord and it seems he returned to Boscawen, where his son Nathaniel was born; he was again a resident of Concord, where he was taxed in 1757 and 1758. His military record can be found in the "Military of New Hampshire," page 185. Mr. Rix was a teamster and it is a tradition that on his return from a trip from Boston he put up at a public house and fell downstairs and broke his neck.

For many years the search was kept up to find his grave, and at last it was found in a desolate spot in the woods in Lenox, Mass. He was a revolutionary soldier in Capt. Mott's company, Conn. troops. It is not known that he had any children. The following is from an old paper:—

ANOTHER REVOLUTIONARY PATRIOT GONE.

Died on the 21st of November, 1848, at the residence of his brother Theophilus Rix in Fairfield, New York, Mr. Nathan Rix, age about eighty-nine years, of heart disease.

The subject of this brief notice was born in Preston, New London Co., Conn., November 23, 1759, and was numbered among those choice spirits of the Revolution who took an active part in the great struggle for American independence.

At the early age of sixteen, he enlisted for nine months in Captain Edward Mott's Company, assisted in building Groton Fort, marched with the company from thence to meet and join the army of General Washington at White Plains, and was honorably discharged November, 1776. In 1777 his patriotic zeal for his oppressed country's cause again led him to enlist for fifteen months in the Rhode Island Company, under the command of Captain West, and after the expiration of his term of enlistment he was drafted to service in the La Fayette Infantry, which was in the engagement and retreat of General Sullivan. In every place, and in all situations, he proved himself a brave soldier, and performed the arduous duties assigned him by his superiors with exemplary fidelity. At the termination of the war he became a tiller of the soil, in which occupation he accumulated a handsome patrimony. He was honest and upright in all his dealings and intercourse with men. As a sincere lover of his country he was a Democrat-Republican of the Jeffersonian school, ever watching political movements with deep interest, almost in the last hour of his long life, believing that the happiness, prosperity and greatness of this Republic mainly depends upon the wise and proper administration of its government as established by our fathers.

61. DANIEL RIX<sup>4</sup>, (Thomas<sup>3</sup>, James<sup>2</sup>, Thomas<sup>1</sup>), born in Preston, Conn., Sept. 24, 1738; married, Oct. 28, 1762, Rebecca Johnson. His early manhood and married life were passed in his native town, and where all his children were born except the youngest. Between 1777 and 1780 he removed to Royalton, Vt., and was living there when the Indians burned the place in 1780. He had gone a few days previously to Preston, so was not at home. Two of his sons, Garner and Joseph, were captured but through the intrepidity of a heroine neighbor, Mrs. Kent, Joseph, being under ten years of age, was given up. Garner was taken to Canada and sold to a French lady who on returning to France sent him home. The descendants of Joseph claim to this day that he was the one who was taken to Canada, but a flat stone was found a few years since in digging a post hole near the Rix house which was burned, on which was cut the date of Garner's return from captivity, dated about one year after his capture. This ought to satisfy the most skeptical.

† See note 6.

The compiler paid a visit to the old homestead of Daniel Rix, in Preston, in September, 1905, which he sold to Benjamin Chapman in 1788-9, and the house and farm is still in possession of the Chapman family. The house is nearly in the shape as when sold, except that a new chimney was built in 1792. The house was built before there were sawmills in the town. The doors are just as originally made and were split from the log, and the marks of the axe made in hewing them can be plainly seen. The ceilings overhead can be reached with the hand and are as black as coal. The house is still occupied by a widow Chapman.

"Daniel Rix was paid £1.0.0 for carting baggage and boards toward building the Fort in Bethel, Vt., and the account was approved Sept. 25, 1780. This will admit his descendants to enter the societies of the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution." Rev. Rolls of Vermont, page 705.

Col. Frye was of New Hampshire, but whether James enlisted from New Hampshire or in Haverhill is not known. Perhaps he enlisted when the regiment was on the way to Bunker Hill. Col. Frye's regiment was at Cambridge, Dec. 26, 1775, and James Rix's signature appears on a receipt for coat money or its equivalent in money for eight months' service in Col. James Frye's regiment, dated Cambridge, Dec. 26, 1775. His name appears as sergeant in Col. James Frye's regiment on a receipt dated Apr. 10, 1781, for bounty paid by Haverhill to serve three years. He was a sergeant in Capt. John Blanchard's company, Col. Wesson's regiment, Aug. 15, 1777; reported discharged Dec. 4, 1779. He was at Fort Stanwix when that fort was besieged for 21 days. He was granted a furlough and started for home and died on the way from smallpox. His furlough is in the hands of his great-granddaughter, Mrs. Eliza Rix Spaulding, Lancaster, N. H.

"CAMP VALLEY FORGE, Feb. 5, 1778.

"Dear Wife:

"With pleasure I embrace this opportunity of writing to let you know that I am in extraordinary good health at present and have been so for two months past, thank God for it. I hope you are well but I have not heard from you since I saw Dudley Dustin at Stillwater, tho I have sent to you several times. I have a great mind to come home, but the time I was promised a furlough, orders came the day before not to give any more until further orders, and being disapointed of our money by the paymaster's fault and the expence of so long a journey, I will content myself to stay till spring. By what is learned and by every thing we see, the wars will not be continued very much longer here in America at present. I am badly out of clothes, but we hear there is cloth coming into camp, tho I am better off than greater part of the men of our state. I have sent here an Indian Broach to each of my sons and a ribbon to my eldest daughter Anna. I have nothing else to send but my love and that I have for all.

"I remain your loving husband,

"CAMP 10 MILES FROM KINGS BRIDGE, July 14, 1781.

"Dear Wife:

"I am writing to you but I know of no way of sending it. I am not with Capt. Emerson, but am as well situated in Col. Jackson's regiment, Capt. Wales's company. I was promoted sergeant in five days after coming to West Point, then the commissary sent for me to his assistance and went and staid with him one month, then my Capt. sent for me to join the company to do orderly duty. He would take no denial so I do that duty tho it does not suit me.

"Brother Nathaniel is left at West Point tending ferry. I have not seen him for thirty days, but I heard from him yesterday by William Marriman. He waited upon an officer until we marched here. He is well suited much better than I am. As to my health, I am very well, but hoping this campaign will end the controversy, I strive to be contented.

"I hope you are well. Give my best wishes and compliments to Capt. Ayre, and to all friends and neighbors.

"When I have an opportunity I will write more fully.

"I remain yours,

"J. RIX.

"P. S. When I was writing the within enclosed, I had no expectation of any opportunity of sending it home, but there is an opportunity offered since. Tell Mr. [illegible] to hire me a man that is fit for the service and come and see me and bring the man. Let it be done very soon or the show will be over soon and he disappointed tho not I, for I very belive the conclusion of the Despot will soon be.

"I will be home by November next man or no man I will warrant.

second, Lydia——. He resided in Boscawen until about 1799, when he removed to Stanstead, Canada, where his wife's brother Nathaniel went the same year. Mr. Danforth was a revolutionary soldier from Boscawen. On a receipt for advanced pay, dated Boscawen, July 2, 1776, of Capt. James Shepard's company, Col. Wyman's regiment, the name of Jedediah Danforth appears as having received from Timothy Walker, Jr., seven pounds eighteen shillings as bounty, and forty shillings for one month's pay in advance. When or where Mr. Danforth died is unknown.

66. NATHANIEL RIX<sup>5</sup> (Nathaniel<sup>4</sup>, James<sup>3</sup>, James<sup>2</sup>, Thomas<sup>1</sup>), born in Boscawen, N. H., July 17, 1753; died in Littleton, N. H., Oct. 12, 1828; married Esther Clark†, born in Newmarket, N. H., Apr. 13, 1758, died in Littleton, July 18, 1832, daughter of John and Esther (Knights) Clark. It is not known when they were married, but soon after they settled in Landaff, N. H. Both Mr. and Mrs. Rix died in the room in which the compiler was born. He resided in Landaff till 1799, when he removed to Stanstead, Canada, where he bought a large tract of land about two miles from Stanstead Plain, and cleared up a good farm, where he remained till about 1820, when he sold out and returned to the States and settled in Littleton, N. H., near his son Nathaniel. He was in Newbury, Vt., in 1773, and he signed a petition to the New York Assembly for a conformation of his grant and for the remission of one-half the usual fees. He was one of 400 signers in the presence of Hon. Samuel Wills, a judge of the court of Common Pleas. The petition was dated Jan. 26, 1773. (Documentary History of New York, Vol. 10, pp. 449-500.)

He was a revolutionary soldier, being one of the first to enlist from Landaff. He served in Capt. Samuel Young's company, Col. Bedel's regiment, from Dec. 15, 1776, to Mar., 1777, also in Capt. Hutchin's company from Aug. 18, 1777, to Sept., 1777. He was also a drummer in Capt. Luther Richardson's company, Col. Bedel's regiment, from Apr. 6, 1778, for eleven months and twenty-five days. He was also in a Mass. regiment, and his name appears on the rolls of that state. His signature appears on a receipt for bounty paid by Haverhill, of date Dec. 2, 1780. He was probably on a visit to his brother, James, and perhaps was induced to enlist because of a larger bounty than New Hampshire paid.

A lodge of masons was organized in Stanstead in the early settlement of that place, and it is believed Mr. Rix was made a mason there, for in 1821, his son Nathaniel was master of Morning Dawn Lodge, located at Waterford, Vt.; it is recorded on the records of the lodge that "Nathaniel Rix, Sr." was a visitor. As father and son were well known as Sr., and Jr., it pretty well establishes the point that Nathaniel, Sr., was a mason. The compiler has searched all masonic publications, but can find no mention of a lodge as having ever been established in Stanstead, yet it is a fact that one was organized there. Hon. Albert S. Batchelder, of Littleton, N. H., searched high and low for the records of both the Stanstead and Waterford lodges, but only one has been found and that of the Waterford Lodge, which was found in Washington.

NATHANIEL RIX (No. 156)

Mr. Rix went to Stanstead with his parents in 1799; returned in the spring of 1802, married and took his bride to Stanstead, where he lived until the war of 1812 broke out, on which account he returned to the States and located in Lisbon, N. H., where he remained but one year, when he purchased a tract of land at North Littleton, N. H., and made him a new home. He built a new set of buildings, doing the carpenter work himself. Here he remained until 1835, when, having been elected Register of Deeds for Grafton County, he removed to Haverhill, the county seat at that time of Grafton County. While a resident of Littleton, he represented the town in the New Hampshire legislature for the years of 1821 to 1827, inclusive, and while a resident of Haverhill represented that town two years. While Register of Deeds he bought the Russell farm in Haverhill, but financial difficulties compelled him to give up so large a farm and he went on to a smaller one at East Haverhill. Here he remained until 1851, when he sold out and went to Lowell, Mass., to spend his last days with his son, Benjamin F., but having been a very active man all his life he could not stand idleness and returned to New Hampshire and settled on a farm in Dalton. He was councilor during Gov. Dinsmore's administration in 1832-3. He was a justice of the peace and performed many marriage ceremonies. He was employed many years in public affairs. He was worshipful master of Morning Dawn Lodge, F. A. M., located at Waterford, Vt., in 1821. He never entered a lodge after the Morgan affair in 1826. Morning Dawn Lodge has been reorganized and is located in Littleton, and among the old masters of the lodge the picture of Nathaniel Rix, among other masters, adorns the walls of the lodge. Mr. Rix was a very stern man, while his wife was a very gentle woman. Many a storm she quelled through her gentle ways. If he was fond of children he never showed it.

In 1836-7, Nathaniel Rix, with John Gile, Jonathan Rowell and Isaac Abbott formed a company under the firm name of Rix & Co., and built three miles of road from the present Profile House down through Franconia Notch, N. H.

From the History of Littleton, N. H.:

"Hon. Nathaniel Rix, Jr., Worshipful Master of Morning Dawn Lodge, was the eldest son of Nathaniel Rix, a soldier of the Revolutionary Army, and Esther (Clark) Rix, and was born in Landaff, Nov. 26, 1777. In 1799 father and son located on lot 6, range 12, in Stanstead, P. Q. There they remained until about the time of the war of 1812, when they came to Littleton. Here Nathaniel, Jr., became a prominent citizen. Beginning with 1821, he was representative in the Legislature for seven years in succession, the longest continuous service of any member from Littleton, except Hon. Harry Bingham, and the largest number of years except those of Mr. Bingham and Rev. David Goodall.

"Mr. Rix was prominent as a civil magistrate and in town offices.

"He resided at North Littleton and was progressive as well as influential in his undertakings. He attempted vine-culture for the production of light wines. Later on he was a prominent worker in the cause of temperance, an advocate of total abstinence, and may probably be regarded as one of the pioneers in the agitation of this reform in this vicinity.

"He was doubtless a man of large political ambition and aspired to the governorship. Having been elected to the office of Register of Deeds in 1835, he moved to Haverhill, holding this office till 1840. While residing at Haverhill he again served two terms as representative in the General Court.

"Haverhill was prolific of incumbents of high office in those days, but Mr. Rix failed there of any considerable advancement in his political fortunes. A large part of his time was occupied in town, county and state offices, and in the duties of civil magistrate.

"As an adviser his judgment was much sought and great reliance was placed upon it. He was everywhere honored and respected. He was a man of good stature and agreeable presence. He was a valuable citizen, an honest and efficient public officer, and deservedly one of the most prominent and popular citizens of this town in the first half of its history."

Nathaniel Rix settled on the David Hopkinson place, first made a beginning on by David's brother, John, both revolu-

He returned from church the day of his death and went to the barn to throw some hay down for his stock. An hour later a member of the family, feeling some anxiety at his long absence, found him in a half conscious state on the barn floor. He was on his feet supporting himself against the side of the barn some distance from where he had fallen. A physician was called, but in a few hours he sank into a comatose state and slept in quiet, undisturbed repose till the hour-glass of his life on earth was exhausted. "Royalton had no better citizen and the church no better disciple." However multitudinous the eccentricities covered by the mantle of religion no one ever doubted the sincerity or consistency of Dea. Rix.

Y., where he attained his majority, and for some time followed mercantile pursuits. In 1834 the spirit of adventure took him westward into the wilds of Michigan, where he decided to cast his lot. Returning to Alexander, he married, and, taking his young wife, went back to Michigan and settled in Romeo, Macomb Co., and entered in his former pursuits. Here he remained until 1840, when he removed to Memphis, same county and state, becoming one of its pioneers, laboring to reclaim from primitive idleness the great resources of the surrounding wilderness. He was twice called to represent his district in the state legislature, and but for the great change in political sentiment, he would no doubt have held higher honors. A man of sterling worth, none knew him but to esteem him. His wife was the daughter of Noah and Lucretia (Burlingame) Sage.

Price for High Sheriff of Kalamazoo county, and after the expiration of the term, was again elected without opposition. In 1853 the compiler was in Kalamazoo on business, and on registering at the hotel, was asked if he was related to George Rix, High Sheriff. It was late in the evening but I went immediately to see him. He answered the call in person and I introduced myself, and received a cordial welcome. Neither knew anything beyond his grandfather but the interview was the cause of my taking up the work of tracing our ancestors, though I did not take it up till years afterwards. In 1862 Mr. Rix joined the army of the frontier at Fort Scott, Kansas, first as assistant wagon master, and later was chief clerk for the quartermaster of the 1st Indian Regiment of Infantry, which position he held to the close of the war. Originally he was a Whig, but for the past forty-five years, a Republican.

Strong, faithful and courageous as he always proved himself to be, the great test came at the opening of the war of the rebellion. He was everywhere and under all circumstances for the Union and the Government, and his extensive acquaintances and family relations, both social and business, with the leading and influential citizens who favored secession rendered his position unpleasant and even dangerous. He was once under nominal arrest, and one of his daughters was imprisoned under guard in their own house. He saved his son from draft by smuggling him on a schooner to New Orleans, where he found friends in the Union army. His life was full of interesting experiences through the whole war. He wrote home to the "Rutland Herald," and sent through the "Underground Railroad" many articles, giving his experiences and which were collected and published for private circulation, called "Incidents of Life in a Southern City During the War," and are full of interest. As soon as peace was declared he gathered the remnants of his property and with his family returned to his native town, arriving there July 18, 1867, where he remained till his death. His widow resides in Royalton.

328. SUSAN DURKEE RIX<sup>6</sup> (Elisha Lee<sup>5</sup>, Daniel<sup>4</sup>, Thomas<sup>3</sup>, James<sup>2</sup>, Thomas<sup>1</sup>), born in Royalton, Vt., May 16, 1818; married, in 1844, Oscar Cutler Hale, born in Wells River, Vt., July 16, 1816; died on board steamer "Clinton," on his way home from Minnesota, Sunday, May 30, 1880. He was a student in Kimball Union Academy when a boy, and afterwards engaged in the manufacture of iron and steel. At the age of twenty-four he was appointed cashier of the Newbury bank and held the position for seventeen years. He was, more than any other man, instrumental in procuring the arrest and conviction of "Bristol Bill," the noted burglar, who broke into the Newbury bank while Colonel Hale was cashier. In 1844 Colonel Hale was appointed aide-de-camp to Gov. Mattocks. He represented Newbury in the Vermont legislature in 18—. In 1858 he removed to Keokuk, Iowa, and in company with George and William Rix, organized the banking company of Rix, Hale & Co., and was appointed manager of the company. He was elected cashier of the Keokuk branch of the State Bank of Iowa in 1862, and retained the same position in the bank after it was merged into the national bank up to the time of his death. He was treasurer of the city of Keokuk several years. He was a stockholder in the Valley National Bank of St. Louis, Mo., and a director in the same up to the time of his death. A few years before his death he was elected trustee of Iowa College at Grinnell, but being so burdened with work he felt unable to assume the additional responsibility, but he was persuaded by some of his friends that it was his duty to accept the appointment, which he did.

He was one of the most intelligent and valued supporters of the Congregational church in Keokuk, and included in the list of his warmest friends the minister who had been his pastor at Wells River. Colonel Hale was a ready writer on all subjects which had engaged his attention, and during the financial discussions just before his death, he contributed several articles to the Chicago and St. Louis papers which attracted wide attention. He always retained his interest in Vermont affairs, and would talk for hours of his boyhood days and the sports he engaged in. In his papers at the bank were found after his death definite instructions concerning his will, and a full schedule of all his property, and among these papers were the following instructions for his burial: "In case of my death, I desire the funeral from my own house. No sermon, no metallic case; wood covered with cloth or velvet trimmings, plain and good; no display or parade. Inscription on monument, on the front, the one word, 'Hale' in large letters; on the side, my full name, 'Oscar Cutler Hale, born July 16, 1816,' and if I were to select an epitaph, and should be worthy of it, the single word, 'Faithful.' " They had no children.

They both lie in the lot of their son Thomas in Dowagiac, Mich.

Mr. Rix like most young men was brought up on a farm, and in the ordinary acceptance of that term was not liberally educated, though he supplemented by careful study and voluminous reading and research the education which the common schools afforded. To a strongly practical training he added by his own exertions unusual literary culture, acquiring among his other accomplishments an almost irresistible fascination for studying the classics. He had a very retentive memory, and could quote pages of almost all the works of which he was familiar.

In his early life he learned the trade of edge-tool making, and proved to be a skillful workman. He taught school nineteen winters, and while teaching in Barnston, Canada, in the winter of 1835, he moved his family there, and after his school closed, he removed to Compton in the same county, and went to work at his trade. the winter of 1836-7, he returned to Littleton, N. H., and after the rebellion was crushed, he returned to Canada and located at King's Croft, in Barnston, and entered into business on his own account. His business here not proving so favorably as he had wished, he returned to the States and located in Rumney, N. H., where he built up a good business, but a financial panic coming on, he met with reverse of fortune, and removed to western New York, landing at Hartland, Niagara County, in June, 1844. In the fall of this year he removed to Middleport, Orleans County, ten miles away, and in the fall of 1846, he removed to Jeddo, a little village in Orleans County, about five miles from Middleport. Here he did business on his own account till 1851, when he removed to Michigan, locating at Manchester. In 1864, while his son, Guy S., was in the hospital in Washington with his leg amputated, his wife there taking care of him, Mr. Rix and wife returned to Jeddo especially to care for Guy's children, and remained until 1870, when they returned to Michigan and located in Dowagiac, where their son Thomas resided. Here they remained until death. He was lame from boyhood, caused by his hip being put out of joint, and never being set.

My father had weaknesses (and who of us do not possess many), but I am proud to say that he was a kind-hearted man, an exceedingly generous one—a man who never turned the distressed and disconsolate from his door, but prompt to act in their behalf. Although not an open worshiper of the Great Architect of nature—in fact, to the uninitiated he was completely the reverse in some respects, for which I pardon him through extenuating circumstances—yet his heart beat with almost the tenderness my dear mother possessed, and however rough his expressions, by many misjudged, I know he inwardly worshiped the Great Artificer at nature's shrine, and I hope to meet them both in the happy hunting grounds of that undiscovered country from which no traveler returns.

company, Mar. 16, 1864; was severely wounded at Resaca, Ga., May 15, 1864; discharged by reason of expiration of term of enlistment. His comrades who knew him in the service and since, refer thus to his soldier life: "One of the best soldiers Connecticut sent to the war. His youthful face, surrounded as it was then by masses of dark, curly hair, wearing the same smiling aspect during the onset of battle, and the hardships of a winter's night on picket, that it ever carried here in Hartford. Private Rix in the service blossomed from a beardless boy to the toughest kind of a veteran. Absolute fidelity to duty and the strictest morality distinguished his life as a soldier. He never shirked, never straggled, was never sick, and was always on hand for any duty. He was absolutely fearless and brave as a man can be. He went out a teetotaler, an anti-slavery man, a moral man, and came back as such. His zeal in all these things grew rather than abated; no fatigue, hardship, exposure, or 'Just this once' glorification over some great victory, ever led him to think of transgressing the life-principles of total abstinence he adopted, and the fact that somehow or other, slavery was to be ended by the war, always made it a glorious war to him. Cromwell never led a more enthusiastic or braver soldier."

In 1866, with a large company of young men, he was converted and united with the Center Congregational Church in Hartford. Mrs. Rix united with the M. E. Church in Rockville, Conn., Mar. 22, 1863, and after they removed to Hartford, she united with the South Park M. E. Church of that place, and Mr. Rix joined the same church, Feb. 1, 1874. Part of the time thereafter, Mr. Rix was steward, and for all the time after he held it until his death. He was a singularly successful and beloved class leader. He was especially a friend to the poor and unfortunate, and often found the time to labor among the outcast in "Rescue Mission" work. In short, whenever an opportunity offered to engage in any of the varied forms of Christian work, he was always ready to take advantage of it. He was of a remarkably sunny disposition, and made hosts of friends; his death is thus referred to by the Dean of the Boston University, School of Theology, then his pastor, the Rev. M. D. Nuell, D. D.:

"His departure was the most triumphant the writer ever witnessed."

Mrs. Rix, being orphaned, found a home with kind relatives, Mr. George Parker and family, in Coventry, Conn., where she lived and attended school. When about eighteen years of age, she went to Rockville, where she lived until her marriage. She was a woman of charming personality, a gifted singer, singing most acceptably in both the Rockville and Hartford churches, a devoted wife and mother, and an active worker in the church. They resided in Hartford, Conn., where his business was a milk dealer.

Mr. Greene was educated in the district schools and at Adams Seminary, and at the Rensselaer Institute, Troy, N. Y., also under private instructions at West Point; was graduated at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institution, Aug. 19, 1851; returned as instructor in September of same year. In March, 1852, was appointed chairman in a party of engineers engaged in enlargement of the Erie Canal at Utica, N. Y. In the autumn of 1853 he resigned and went to Ohio, where he was engaged in charge of a division of the Cleveland-Medina & Tuscarawas Railroad. Later he accompanied the party extending the survey to Wheeling, Va., and made maps and profile of the survey. On Dec. 15, 1853, he set the last stake in the Ohio River opposite Wheeling. In the spring of 1854 he removed to Indiana and had charge of a division of the Logansport & Northern Indiana Railroad, with headquarters at Cherubusco. Work was suspended in the fall and, ill with malarial fever, he returned to his home in Adams. In September, 1855, he returned to the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute as a professor, which position he held until May, 1861, when he was appointed third assistant engineer in the U. S. Navy. At the same time he was offered by the Government of Peru, for a period of five years, the position as Chief Topographical Engineer of that Republic at a salary nearly six times greater than that of the naval position, but under the circumstances the Peruvian position was rejected and the naval position accepted. From May, 1861, to Oct., 1862, he was on blockade at sea. He was at the capture of the Hatteras forts, at Port Royal, at the occupation of Norfolk, and the Gulf of Mexico. In September, 1862, he was detached from the U. S. S. "Susquehanna," and ordered to the U. S. Naval Academy, then at Newport, R. I., as Assistant Professor of Natural and Experimental Philosophy, and Instructor in Steam Engineering. Here he remained three years, during which time those midshipmen who are now Rear Admirals, were under his instructions. In June, 1865, he was detached from the Naval Academy and ordered to duty as assistant to the chief of the bureau of steam engineering in the navy department at Washington. Here he remained three years. In the spring of 1868, he was granted leave of absence to assume the duties of principal assistant engineer in charge of the Albany City Water Works. In Feb., 1869, he was ordered to sea as engineer in charge of the U. S. S.

Narragansett, and sailed for the West Indies. In June of that year he was one of several officers and men who were attacked by yellow fever, and the ship was ordered north and put out of commission at Portsmouth, N. H. In September, 1869, he was ordered as Chief Engineer of the Port Admiral's vessel, "Frolic," in New York harbor, and, after reporting in obedience to orders, he sent in his resignation, which was accepted. He was appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, a member of a commission which was charged with testing devices for securing the revenue on distilled spirits and reporting on the same. This was known as the "Whiskey Commission." After resigning, Mr. Greene returned to Troy and entered upon the practice of his chosen profession which he had followed successfully. In 1871 he was made engineer of a state commission charged with the examination and test of devices for the substitution of steam for animal power on the canals of the state, and authorized to award a prize of $100,000 to the successful device, if such should be found. In Jan., 1874, he was appointed division engineer of the eastern division of the state canals, and in July was promoted to be Deputy State Engineer, which position he held until Dec. 31, 1877. In Sept., 1878, he was elected Director and Professor of Geodesy and Road Engineering in the Rensselaer Institute, Troy, N. Y., which position he held until Sept., 1891, when he resigned. Since that time he has been located at Troy as a Consulting Engineer. In the seventies he served three years as School Commissioner of Troy.

Mr. Green is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, American Society of Naval Engineers, New England Society of Naval Engineers, American Association for the Advancement of Science, Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the U. S., Naval Order of the U. S., Grand Army of the Republic, Society of the Founders and Patriots of America, Sons of the American Revolution, Army and Navy Club, New York City, Imperial Red Cross Society of Japan, etc.

Elizabeth Story. Mr. Greene grew up on the farm in Adams, and like most boys of that period attended the district school in the winters. He received additional education at Adams Seminary and the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy, N. Y., from which he graduated in 1859. In 1860 he was appointed third assistant engineer in the U. S. Navy, and ordered to the U. S. S. "Susquehanna" for a cruise in the Mediterranean, and to the Holy Land. His ship was ordered home early in 1861. In the summer of that year he was detached and ordered to the Bureau of Steam Engineering in the Navy Department at Washington, D. C. Here he remained until 1868, the trusted and confidential Assistant of the Chief of the Bureau, Commodore Sherwood. He was then detached and ordered as First Assistant Engineer in charge of a naval vessel in the South Pacific, where he remained three years, after which followed a tour of shore duty. Then a sea and shore duty alternated until 1895, when he was retired for "Disability incident to the service." In March, 1889, he was Chief Engineer of the U. S. S. "Vandalia" which was wrecked on the fifteenth of that month during the terrific hurricane which swept the harbor of Apia, Samoa, Navigators' Islands, and destroyed several war ships. Engineer Greene was swept overboard three times and got back on board twice, only to be swept a third time into the angry sea. The terrible force of the storm was such that a 3,000 ton German ship was picked up bodily and thrown high and dry on shore. The Chief Engineer battled for three long hours with the waters, when he secured a plank and paddled for the shore. In the breakers, the natives formed a line and rushed into the water and brought in the exhausted officer safely to the shore. Chief Engineer never fully recovered from this fearful experience. He died in Washington, D. C., Mar. 8, 1896, and his remains were taken to Adams, N. Y., and buried in the family plot in Rural Cemetery.

CHARLES N. RIX (No. 628)

Mich. Just at this time he was thrown on his own resources for a living by his father's failure in his stock raising and farming, causing the loss of a large property by mortgage debts. He then entered into the employment of a carpenter, and was soon in a position to enter business on his own account, though only nineteen years of age. While thus engaged, he concluded he was wanted in the army, and in August, 1862, he entered the United States Army in the 1st Indian Regiment, Mounted Infantry, as Quartermaster Sergeant at Fort Scott, Kansas. He was Orderly Sergeant of Co. D, and was promoted 1st Lieut., Co. D, in April, 1863, and was in command of his company from that date until he was mustered out May 31, 1865. He was promoted Captain in 1864. He was at the head of his company in every battle in which his regiment was engaged during its service.

Immediately after he was mustered out he entered the pay department, U. S. Army, as paymaster's clerk, where he remained until January, 1866. January 3, 1867, he entered the Kansas Valley National Bank, and has since been engaged in the banking business, having held some prominent positions during this time. In 1880 he removed to Hot Springs, Ark., where he is the president of the Arkansas National Bank. Mr. Rix is a prominent Mason and has held the highest offices; prominent in politics, in fact a leader, but never asking for office, aiding his party by every honorable means, a staunch Republican from early manhood. 667. JAMES MADISON RIX<sup>8</sup> (Caleb<sup>7</sup>, Nathaniel<sup>6</sup>, James<sup>5</sup>, Nathaniel<sup>4</sup>, James<sup>3</sup>, James<sup>2</sup>, Thomas<sup>1</sup>), born in Landaff, N. H., Dec. 23, 1811; died in Boston, Mass. He married, in Concord, N. H., Sept. 30, 1834, Mary Palmer, born in 1825; died in Lancaster, N. H., Oct. 5, 1860. She was the daughter of Samuel and Anna (Selleair) Palmer, formerly of York, Maine, but later of Concord, N. H., where Mrs. Rix was born. The Selleair family were French Huguenots.

Mr. Rix received his education in the schools of his native town and at the Haverhill Academy, Haverhill, N. H., from which he graduated, and soon after he entered the office of the "Democrat-Republican," then published at Haverhill, N. H. From Haverhill, he entered the office of the "New Hampshire Patriot," at Concord, N. H., under the management of Isaac Hill. Abandoning for the time being the "Art preservative of arts," he entered the bookstore of Moses Atwood, who failed in the business, engulfing $2,000, the savings of the young man, which had been intrusted to him by friends. In July, 1839, he removed to Lancaster, N. H., to edit and conduct an organ for his party, deemed necessary by the establishment of the "White Mountain Ægis," the organ of the Whig party.

Economic and political themes were debated with vigor, and the issues of the day were analyzed with intelligent force in pure and comprehensive English. James M. Rix was a born editor, critical, disputatious, intelligent and forceful. An artiele from his pen was certain to be widely read. Mr. Rix was a bank commissioner in 1843-46; was clerk of the Supreme, Superior and Common Pleas courts from 1839 to 1846. His family lived in Lancaster, N. H., at the time of his death.

When about six years of age his mother was murdered in Brockport, N. Y., where they lived, and soon after his father showed signs of mental derangement. At one time he set out with a younger sister of Bradford's to visit an aunt a few miles away. The country was then a wilderness, and whether they were lost on the way and perished from hunger and exposure, or were devoured by wild beasts, was never known, as they were never heard from afterwards. They settled in Middleport, N. Y., where three children were born, and in 1851 he removed to Tecumseh, Mich., where the other children were born. He finally removed to Albion, Mich., where his daughters had established themselves in the millinery business. Mr. Jones was a soldier in the war of the rebellion in 1861-65; was in a Michigan regiment.

711. GUY SCOBY RIX<sup>8</sup> (Guy C.<sup>7</sup>, Nathaniel<sup>6</sup>, Nathaniel<sup>5</sup>, Nathaniel<sup>4</sup>, James<sup>3</sup>, James<sup>2</sup>, Thomas<sup>1</sup>), born in Littleton, N. H., Nov. 12, 1828; married, in Warren, N. H., by Rev. James Adams, Abigail Augusta Place,† born in Haverhill, N. H., Feb. 1, 1835, daughter of James and Mary Lovejoy (Gould) Place. Mr. Rix received what little education he has in the common schools, one term in a High School in Rumney, N. H., and one winter in the common school in Middleport, N. Y., in the winter of 1845-46, which was the last of his schooling. At the age of sixteen he accompanied his parents to western New York and located in Hartland, Niagara County, and in the fall of that year (1844) he went with his parents to Middleport, about ten miles away, and in about one year they removed to Jeddo, Orleans County, a little hamlet about five miles from Middleport, just across the line of Orleans County on the "Ridge Road." Here he remained, working for his father in the shop, when his parents removed to Michigan in 1851, when he returned east to visit his grandparents, who were living in Haverhill, N. H. Here he met the lady whom he afterwards made his wife, and in consequence concluded he would not return, and entered the employ of Jonathan S. Nichols at Haverhill Corner, in the department of blacksmithing. Here he remained till the spring of 1853, when he went to Littleton, his native town, and entered the employ of Daniel C. Quimby, when he left there July 18, 1853, for Michigan, where his parents resided. Here he entered into partnership with Mr. Munroe Ingraham in the foundry and machine business.

In May, 1854, he started east for his bride, and immediately after his marriage started on his return for Michigan. That same fall both he and his wife were taken down with fever and ague, and being dissatisfied with the country he disposed of his interest in the business and returned to Littleton and again entered into the employ of Mr. Quimby. In the spring of 1855 he removed to Concord, N. H., and entered the employ of Lewis Downing & Sons, carriage manufacturers, where he remained till the war of 1861-65 broke out, when he removed to western New York and located at County Line, a village and post office of that name on the line between Niagara and Orleans Counties, and about two miles from Lake Ontario. Here he entered into business with his brother Joel in the business of carriage making and custom blacksmithing. Here he remained till July 21, 1862, when he enlisted in Co. A, 129th N. Y. Vol. Inf., Capt. Erastus M. Spaulding, Col. Peter A. Porter. He was mustered into the U. S. service at Lockport, Aug. 22, 1862, and the next day the regiment left for Baltimore, Md., where it did guard duty in and around Baltimore. December 19, 1862, the regiment was reorganized into the 8th New York Heavy Artillery. In Grant's campaign of 1864 the regiment was ordered to the front.

Mr. Rix was appointed Armorer at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md., Oct. 21, 1862; Brigade Armorer at same fort, May 17, 1863; and Artificer in May, 1864. He participated in the battles of North Anna River, Coal Harbor, June 3, 1864, front of Petersburg, June 16, 17, 19 and 22, at which battle he was wounded and taken to the rear. He was taken to Washington, D. C., and landed in Mount Pleasant Hospital, where his right leg was amputated July 7, 1864. His wife went to Washington to care for him and was with him until early in November of that year, when they both went to their home, which had been established in the spring at the old stand of his father.

In February, 1865, he returned to the hospital in Washington and was discharged March 21, 1865, and returned to Jeddo and commenced anew the carriage business. He continued the business until 1873, when in that year he made a visit east, and an opening presented itself which he took advantage of and returning to Jeddo sold out his plant and in November, 1873, removed his family to Concord, N. H., and entered the employ of the Concord Carriage Co., as foreman in the blacksmithing department. In 1878 he went to St. Louis, Mo., as superintendent of a large carriage manufactory, and after a year moved his family there, but his wife being very much out of health and homesick he returned with them, but went back and stayed four years, when the firm abandoned the carriage business and went into manufacturing electric street cars, but Mr. Rix not understanding such work, nor caring for it, returned to Concord and re-entered the employ of the Concord Carriage Co.

Mr. Rix has been a strong temperance man all his life and is probably the oldest "Son of Temperance" in the state, if not in the United States, having been initiated in Jeddo Division, No. 27, by Philip S. White, of Philadelphia, in June, 1847. He was also made an Odd Fellow in Moosehillock Lodge, No. 25, in Haverhill, N. H., in January, 1852. He is also a member of the G. A. R. Post, in Concord. He is a Justice of the Peace and Quorum. In 1898, Mr. Rix lost his health, so much so that he has been unable since to do any manual labor, and since has been doing genealogical work. Both Mr. and Mrs. Rix are members of the M. E. Church in Concord, where they reside.

MR. AND MRS. HENRY A. FARWELL (No. 717)

717. MARTHA RIX<sup>8</sup> (Guy C.<sup>7</sup>, Nathaniel<sup>6</sup>, Nathaniel<sup>5</sup>, Nathaniel<sup>4</sup>, James<sup>3</sup>, James<sup>2</sup>, Thomas<sup>1</sup>), born in Barnston, Canada, Jan. 16, 1841; died in Glenwood, Mich., Sept. 30, 1892, and was buried in Dr. Rix's lot in Dowagiac. She married, Apr. 11, 1866, Henry A. Farwell, born in Ridgeway, Orleans Co., N. Y., Mar. 29, 1842. He was a farmer, first in Yates, N. Y., then in Hartland, N. Y., but the farm not proving as was expected he sold out and removed to Jeddo, N. Y. In 1874 he removed to Dowagiac, Mich., and bought a farm just out of the city and sold out in a few years and bought one in Glenwood, about ten miles east of Dowagiac, on the Michigan Central Railroad. Here in the spring of 1892 his wife was taken sick, and to be near a physician they removed temporarily to Dowagiac, but near her last days she said she wished to die at her own home and was taken there. In June of the year in which she died Minnie Rix, her niece, and daughter of her brother, Guy S., left Concord at a few hours' notice for Dowagiac to care for her aunt Martha, and stayed and cared for her until her death, and was alone with her when she died, her husband being called away on business, none thinking her death was so near.

Mr. Farwell enlisted Aug. 22, 1862, in Co. A, 129th N. Y. Inf.; discharged for disability June 19, 1863. While on the farm in Dowagiac he worked occasionally in a stove foundry and shop and received an injury by the bursting of an emery wheel, which it is thought caused insanity after a few years. The death of his wife broke him all up, and disposing of every piece of property he had he went east to visit his brother-in-law, Guy S. Rix, in Concord, N. H. It was soon discovered he was deranged, he was sent back to Michigan and in a few days he was taken to the Insane Asylum at Kalamazoo, where he died in 1899.

The compiler became acquainted with Mr. Farwell while in the army, where they bunked together, and were as brothers, as it proved to be a fact afterwards, and there is no man living whom he loved with a deeper, brotherly love than he had for Henry A. Farwell. Mr. Farwell was known and recognized in the community in which he lived as a kind, affectionate husband and father, a good neighbor and an upright citizen.

NOTES

NOTES.

Note 1. There were two Thomas Rixes, one the son of Thomas<sup>1</sup>, and Thomas of Wethersfield, probably about the same age. He married Abigail, daughter of John Ingersole, and died May 21, 1690, leaving a widow and one child, Abigail. She married about 1696, Joshua Wills, of Windsor. It is rather uncertain whether Thomas of Wethersfield married Abigail Ingersole or whether Thomas, son of Thomas<sup>1</sup>, married Abigail Ingersole, but the records, though meager, tend to show that the record of Thomas<sup>2</sup> is correct. A Richard Rix was in Salem in 1776. Both Richard and Thomas are untraced. The almost universal tradition exists in this family that "three brothers came over." William and Thomas whom we know, were brothers, and perhaps Thomas of Wethersfield and Richard of Salem were brothers also.

AN ADVENTURE WITH THE INDIANS.

BY MRS. RACHEL ANN (RIX) HOWLAND.

Note 22a. It was during the month of October, 1780, said my grandfather, in answer to the entreaties of a bevy of children to relate to us the story of his captivity by the Indians, that a party consisting of three hundred Indians commanded by a British officer, were sent from Canada to plunder and destroy the town of Royalton.

This place, situated in the valley of the White River, was the natural thoroughfare of the Indians from the Connecticut River to Lake Champlain. About ten years previous a few families had moved from Connecticut and commenced the settlement. Other families had from time to time moved in, and now the population numbered about three hundred.

"How long, grandpa, had your family lived there when the Indians burned the place?"

It was only the year previous that my father came up from Connecticut and bought a farm on which some improvements had been made,—twenty-five or thirty acres of land had been cleared up, a log house and barns had been built on it.

It was arranged we were to occupy the log house until father could obtain lumber and building materials for a good substantial frame house. But I shall never forget, children, how desolate and forbidding was the house and its surroundings, when at the end of our toilsome journey from Connecticut we reached the place that was to be our future home, or how homesick we felt when we thought of the home and friends we had left behind.

"Oh, Mother, how can we live in this gloomy, desolate place," exclaimed sister Susie, "and everything is as dismal without as within doors." But mother had that cheerful courage which "sees the silver lining behind the darkest cloud."

"Now dear children," said she, "instead of grieving or dwelling sadly on the home we have left behind, let us remember and be grateful for the many blessings God continues to bestow. We have a shelter and a roof over our heads. True, it looks rough, yet, children, if you will lend a helping hand, I think we shall be able to make a cosy, comfortable home out of our rough log house." Mother knew if our hands and minds were busy in the endeavor to improve our surroundings, we would be quite sure to forget imaginary troubles.

The next morning we went to work with a will. The house had two good-sized rooms and two bedrooms. These were thoroughly scrubbed, the inner walls were made clean and white. We had a few articles of furniture, a few chairs, a bureau, two tables, and a few kitchen utensils, that we brought with us from Connecticut, but mother had resources for every emergency. Father and I constructed a rough frame for a lounge or sofa, and also made from the same material at hand, a large armchair. These mother stuffed, cushioned and covered with a pretty chintz cover—the groundwork of a dark glossy chocolate with a running vine of leaves and sprays of bright buds and bell flowers. Then we took a strong barrel, sawing down the staves to the arms and seat, and firmly nailing on the rockers; this was the foundation for a rocking chair, which, when stuffed and cushioned and covered with the chintz, made a comfortable resting place. These made not only convenient articles of furniture but were quite an ornament to our little sitting room. I well remember how cheery the room looked with its snowy white curtains and somewhat sombre carpet of striped gray and green, relieved by the bright rugs in front of the lounge and table. The chairs, tables and bureau were polished by repeated rubbing with wax to nearly the brightness of mahogany. Then, too, the kitchen was neat, bright and inviting, with its white sanded floor, its dresser with its shining utensils, platters, pans, etc., like burnished steel.

Sister Susie had a great passion for flowers and early in spring we made flower beds beneath the windows and each side of the path leading to the road, and by midsummer the flowers were blooming in profusion—old-fashioned flowers—pinks, sweet peas, morning glories, four o'clocks, and every day the house was made bright with blooming flowers. A grape vine had been set out a year or two previous, this we trained to run over the porch, indeed, before Christmas it had spread its graceful branches and nearly covered the front of the house. Thus, in our efforts to improve and beautify, we learned to love our new home, indeed, before even the first summer had passed, we had all become happy and contented and began to realize that our lot had been cast in a lovely and charming place.

As I look back, children, to those days I can truly say they were the happiest of my life. I recollect one day one of the neighbors coming in one day; after we had become somewhat settled, he remarked to father, "I declare Deacon, this house don't look like the same rough place, beats all I ever see, the improvements you have made here, but massy sakes alive what knack some of these gals and wimming dew have to bring things round ship shape. Now there's your wife, Deacon, allerz seems to carry a streak of sunshine wherever she goes."

It was indeed true, as Mrs. K. said, mother's presence made the sunshine of that home, her smile seemed to scatter the clouds. In our grief and troubles we always found in her warm sympathy and loving, wise council.

Meantime the little settlement was prospering, although the people suffered many privations; war was raging with Great Britain; the people were doing all in their power to assist Washington and his noble army.

The year of 1780 was a very productive one, the newly cleared land yielded bountiful crops and during that year father had cleared some fifty acres. In October of that year, father started for Connecticut on business. He had been absent but a few days when early one Monday morning a man came riding at the top of speed on horseback, with the news that a large company of Indians and tories, disguised as Indians, had come from Canada, and were already busy at the north of the village in pillage and destruction, about a mile above the mouth of the first branch, near the gristmill. Two men had been killed and the Indians were coming down the branch destroying everything within their reach. This young man (whose name was Phineas Parkhurst), while escaping was shot, the ball forming a little cul de sac on the right side, in which he held it, while he continued down the river to warn the inhabitants.

When this terrible news reached us we children were panic stricken and almost wild with terror, but mother was perfectly calm and collected. Now children, said she, our escape depends mainly upon you. If you will control your fears and do as I direct, I think we will be able to reach the fort in Sharon. Turning to me, she said, "Garner, my son, hurry down to the lower barn for old 'Whity'" a steady old horse that mother used when she rode horseback, "while sister Susie and Rebecca help me to get the children ready." I sped on the wings of the wind to the meadow barn and when I returned with the horse mother and the children were ready to leave the house, warmly wrapped in woolen garments and shawls. Then fastening the saddle on old "Whity" I went to the shed for the bridle, but found it had been left at the lower barn, nearly a quarter of a mile away—no time to go after it, so I took a large bandanna handkerchief and put it into "Whity's" mouth for a bridle. In the house my little five-year-old brother, Daniel, was capering and clapping his hands in high glee, his black eyes sparkling with delight, and exclaiming, "Daney dot on his meetin' toat, Daney doin to ride on old 'Whity's' back."

Just as we were leaving the house mother handed me the large family Bible. "Can you think of a safe place for this book? if not you must carry it with you." But I wanted the free use of my hands to help mother and the children. There was of course no safe place for it either in barns, house or shed, as they would doubtless be burned. Just then I happened to think of the hollow log at the back of the garden, where the old hen stole her nest, and as quick as thought I deposited the Bible in the hollow log. I ran back to the front gate where I found Mr. K. and wife, our nearest neighbors, they had received the alarm and were seeking some place of safety.

Mother was already seated on old "Whity's" back with the baby in her arms, and Mrs. K. lifted little Dan to a seat on the horse's back behind mother. "Now cling tight holt of your marm, little man." "No, No, Danny won't fall more'n a squirrel, he is used to riding bareback. If you travel along at a good jog, I kalkerlate you will get to the fort all right, 'taint more'n five or six miles, and the old hoos is a mighty good roadster." "But massy sakes alive, my wife aint agoing to stan it to go afoot," said Mr. K., "what with fright and excitement, she is just ready to drop this blessed minite. There's your girls tew, Mr. Rix, they wont never get there afoot. Come to think ont all reound, I guess I had better strike off into the woods with my wife, and your gals can go along with us. We can keep on a piece of the mountain where there is a clump of pines and hemlocks, besides the ledge there will be a safe hiding place as ever was. Yes, that's so," said good old Mr. K., "see there is poor little Beckey, she's eanamost played out aready, come little gals both on ye, come, grand-marm Kent will take proper good care of ye poor little crectures."

We were soon overtaken by several of the people living near the mill, who had escaped. They informed us that the mill was in flames, and the Indians were burning houses, killing those who attempted to escape, and carrying on the work of carnage and destruction with a high hand. As we hurried on we encountered dozens of men, women and children, who had fled from their homes, terror stricken, seeking some place of safety; some fled to the mountain, others to the woods, while the larger number kept to the road, following down the river towards the fort, some four or five miles distant. We traveled on with all possible speed, but were not within a mile of the fort, when the terrible war whoop of savages resounded in our ears. On they came, yelling and shouting, and hideous in their fantastic dress and war paint. In a few minutes they had overtaken and surrounded us, a little company of defenseless men, women and children. Resistance was of course useless. My little brother Joe and myself were torn from mother, notwithstanding her piteous pleadings and entreaties. I had a stout club in my hand with which I tried to defend myself, determined to sell my liberty as dearly as possible, but that was quickly wrested from me. We were securely bound and marched back to the place where the captain of the band awaited the coming of the raiding party. Oh, the scenes of that terrible day, dear children, seems burned on my memory, and even to-day, after this long interval of years, I can hardly think of them with any degree of composure.

All the men and boys of our party were made prisoners. Among these was a boy six or seven years of age, little Tommy Hendee, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow. The mother followed her son, wading through the river and came confidently into camp, demanding her boy. Emboldened by success, she then appealed to the captain to release others among the children who had been captured. "Why," said she, "these little creatures will never endure the long march through the wilderness." "Perhaps not," replied the captain, "but the Indians have been promised the disposal of the prisoners. If they will consent to release those under the age of ten years, I shall not object." The Indians finally agreed to give up as many of the children under ten years of age as Mrs. Hendee could carry through the river on her back. Even their cruel hearts were touched by the heroic bravery of the noble woman. Several times she slipped and fell in the water, but would quickly regain her footing, when the Indians, who were watching her, would clap their hands, crying out with great glee, "good squaw, good squaw." Thus she rescued and restored to their parents nine little boys. The last child carried over the river was my little brother Joe. She came up to the Indian who kept guard over me and begged him to release me. "No, No," cried he, "that boy over ten years old." "He is but a few months past ten," Mrs. Hendee replied, "too small a boy for so long a march, let him go back with his little brother." "No, no," replied the old Indian, "my prisoner, big heap fight in that boy, he make brave Injin warrior." Mrs. Hendee entreated and expostulated, but all in vain, he utterly refused to release me. I could never describe to you the utter despair which took possession of me, and when I found that Mrs. Hendee's efforts for my rescue were in vain, my disappointment and grief were too deep for tears, now to be torn from them in this cruel manner seemed worse than death.

The Indians now made hurried preparations for their homeward march.

They took a shorter route across the hills by the way of Randolph, and ere nightfall we had traveled many weary miles on our way to Montreal. When father returned home from Connecticut what a scene of desolation presented itself. His house with its contents, the barns, with the grain, hay and cattle, had all been burned and destroyed by the savages. Indeed, they made their savage boast that they had burned every house and barn in the town. One house, however, was saved by the timely efforts of Mr. Durkee, the wife of Lieut. Durkee. This family, who lived on the river about four miles above our house, did not know of the approach of the Indians. Happening to look out of the window she saw them crowding in at the front gate. She was alone in the house with her baby, her husband and sons were at work in the barn. She snatched her baby from the cradle and rushed out at the back door just as the Indians entered the front door. She fled with the speed of a deer up the brook, but was seen and followed by one of the Indians. A few rods from the brook there was a clump of hemlock trees behind which was a pile of brush and between the brush and trees she hid. The old Indian followed close by the brook but did not find her. She was in an agony of fear lest her baby should cry and thus betray her whereabouts, but fortunately it kept quiet. The Indian passed a little farther up the brook, then crossed and returned on the other side to the house without finding her, although he passed within a few feet of her. Half paralyzed with fright as she crouched down in the shadows of the hemlocks she heard the savage exclaim, "Ugh! Squaw gone with papoose way up the mountain, me no hunt any more." It was with a great feeling of relief she saw him make his way back to the house. They made but short tarry at Mr. Durkee's and hastened on to join the main body who had crossed the hills by a shorter route. When Mrs. Durkee returned to the house she found it on fire, her husband and sons had been carried away as prisoners. The barn was also on fire, but she finally succeeded in extinguishing it and saving the buildings, one of which has been preserved, the partially charred boards and timbers on one side plainly bear marks of flame and smoke. The Indians also slaughtered one hundred and fifty neat cattle and all the hogs and poultry they could find, and had destroyed all the furniture and valuables which they could not carry away, wiping out years of labor.

Father found mother staying with a kind-hearted family in a neighboring settlement. He was overpowered with grief for the loss of his eldest son, and with the terrible misfortunes that had befallen him. But winter was approaching and he immediately set about providing a shelter for his little family. The noble-hearted settlers on the Connecticut River came to assist the people of Royalton, and ere winter set in more than a dozen rough but comfortable houses had been erected. Kind-hearted friends from abroad had provided them with a few household articles and articles of furniture, and before winter had set in father's family had moved into their new home, but their hearts were wrung with anguish and grief at the loss of their beloved child. Every morning and evening, at the family altar, father besought God to keep, preserve, and finally restore to them their son. I have heard my dear mother say that during that long winter of grief and uncertainty there was scarcely an hour passed but a silent, earnest petition went up from her burdened heart. "Lord be thou near to our dear one, protect and keep him from evil and teach us to trust thee whatever betides." In the darkest hours of grief and anxiety she found comfort and hope in God's word. And thus those hours that seemed so dark were rich with her discipline, courage, endurance and faith.

Thus time slipped by; how anxiously they waited to hear even one word, that I was alive, but none came. They knew I had been taken to Canada with the other prisoners, but in respect to my fate after reaching Montreal, they had heard nothing. Thus the winter passed and spring opened. One day father came in feeling unusually troubled and dejected, "Oh, mother," he exclaimed, "I feel the loss of that dear child more and more, how I wish for his cheerful presence, and how empty life seems; then this terrible uncertainty respecting his fate, I cannot see the least rift in the clouds or the least gleam of comfort." "Dear husband," replied mother, "In the darkest hours of trouble, I have always found hope and comfort in God's word, and now let us see what He will say," and taking the Bible (the same one which I had hidden in the hollow log, and which of all the contents of the house had alone been saved), she opened it and read "trust ye in the Lord forever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength. Commit thy ways unto the Lord. Trust also in the Lord and He shall bring it to pass." "Just think of it, dear father, God himself speaks to us now, He not only entreats, but He commands us to commit all into His hands, to trust also to Him and His word is pledged, He will bring it to pass." "I see it now," said father, "I have failed to trust God fully." Then on his bended knees he renewedly committed to the care of the Great Shepherd, the lamb that had so suddenly been torn from the parent fold, and besought the Lord to inspire him with perfect faith and trust. Then the burden of grief was removed and the peace which perfect trust and faith inspired seemed to fill his heart. And thus sustained by firm faith in God's promises, from that time forward, their hearts were inspired with renewed courage and faith to believe that He would guard and protect their beloved child from evil and danger, and finally bring him back to them in safety.

The summer passed and autumn came. Nearly a year had gone by, still not one word had they heard from me. Sometimes when doubts and fears would arise, then God's promises—those words uttered hundreds of years ago, yet glowing with the Eternal faith of God's truth and wisdom, "Commit thy ways unto the Lord. Trust also Him, and He shall bring it to pass," would fill their hearts with renewed hope and comfort. Truly, "The steps of faith fall on the seeming void, but find the rock beneath." One Sabbath morning early in October, the family were at breakfast, when suddenly the door opened and I bounded into the room, and was clasped in my parents' arms. "Bless the Lord, Oh, my soul," exclaimed father, "we have trusted in the Lord and thou hast brought it to pass, thou hast restored to us our dear son, Blessed be thy Holy name." My dear little brothers and sisters crowded around me almost wild with joy, as mother said, "I think that was the happiest day of all our lives."

"Please tell us, grandpa, about your captivity and release from the Indians."

It was a long, weary march, continued he, through the wilderness; with the other prisoners, I was taken to Montreal. A kind-hearted French lady saw me and became interested in my behalf. She at length succeeded in obtaining my release from the Indians. She took me to her house, treating me with the utmost kindness and was at last instrumental in sending me home. In parting with me she made me a present of a gold guinea.

"Did you spend it on the way home?" No, but I will tell you children how I did spend that guinea. A few Sabbaths after I reached home, a young minister came to preach for us. The price for his services was a guinea for the Sunday. As father was treasurer of the society, the duty of paying the minister devolved on him, but there was no money in the treasury. I went to the little box in which I kept my small treasures and brought the guinea to father to pay the minister. "That is my noble-hearted boy," said father, "but you shall never lose anything by this my son." "I think that was too bad," said cousin Henry, "I wouldn't have given him the guinea anyhow." Why, my dear children, I never in my life gave anything more willingly or gladly. God's minister was worthy of his pay. I had been taught, it is always safe giving to the Lord. In my case this was verified, for it was, indeed, the source of all my future worldly prosperity. As soon as father was able to do so, he repaid me, not in gold, but he gave me a dozen sheep and several heifers. These were put out to double, and to such advantage, that when I became of age I was worth nearly a thousand dollars, a goodly amount for those days to begin the world with. As long as time endures, will those words of the inspired penman prove true, "Give and it shall be given unto you again, heaped up, pressed down, flowing over."
